MR. MARTIN'S MISERY.

WHAT HE SAID HE ENDURED WITH HIS MICH-DIVORCED WIFE.

Married to a Woman Who Had Been Three Times Separated from Her Husband. Life Was Unendurable—He Abandoned Her and Sues for Divorce.

New York, July 25.—Mr. Edward Martin gets $10,000 a year as director in a large insurance company in this city. He has a nice home at Yonkers, is sixty-three years old, and has been married to his present wife seven years. Now she is suing him for a divorce, and he is apparently anxious to get rid of her as she is of him. A divorce suit is no new thing for the lady. She has been divorced three times, and, according to Mr. Martin, has made money every time by the separation. Before Judge Donohue, in supreme court, she asked $250 a month alimony and $500 consent fee on the ground of abandonment.

The story of the wife's marriages and divorces is a varied one, as told by her last husband. "Her first matrimonial venture," says he, "was with Martin T. Taylor, who is still living. Her second was James W. Ensign, now dead, to whom she was twice married, and from whom she was twice divorced. In this last divorce, upon the ground of desertion, she was awarded $37 West Thirty-fourth street, worth about $20,000, $25,000 more in cash and a wardrobe sufficient to last her a lifetime. It was always her boast that in the three divorces she had made money." Mr. Martin says he became the victim of her fourth matrimonial venture December 31, 1877. She was about thirty-eight years old and without children. He was a widower about fifty-six years, with two children—his daughter Ella, then about twenty years old, and a son, Edward Jr., about seventeen. "The plaintiff," he said, "is a woman of strong will, ungovernable temper and determination, being possessed of abundant means of her own, being worth at least $40,000 in real and personal property, having at least $15,000 out at interest and following the practice of medicine. She is more than arbitrary in her disposition." The couple went to live at Hastings shortly after their marriage, but afterwards removed to Yonkers. Two or three times they separated, but reconciliations were effected. Finally, late February, again she band refused to support her and on this she bases her suit.

As specimens of their marital life the husband alleges that in 1879 she abandoned him at Hastings and for six months was absent in Omaha. She returned penitent and he forgave her. A year later, when he again abandoned him in this city, and "in bad faith, falsely, wickedly and maliciously preferred charges against him and sought to have their marriage annulled. But she abandoned the suit and promised good behavior and he forgave her once more. They subsequently moved to Yonkers, where, he says, she manifested a violent hatred of his children, heaped insults and indignities upon them and drove his daughter from the house by threats of personal dishonor. She struck him in the face in the presence of his children and, he says, forced him through the streets of Yonkers hoping along upon him because he was going to a funeral. Once when driving with her she threatened to give the village a "screech" or yelling concert, if he did not at once do as she desired. On another occasion, it is said, she attempted to throw the contents of a bottle of caustic upon him. Still another time she smashed a lighted cigar he was smoking in his face because he declined to give her one.

For several months before she finally left the house neither Mr. Martin nor his children had spoken to his wife, although they met daily at meals. He says that she left the house voluntarily February 17 last, and removed all her property. He then determined, he says, as he had given her a fair trial and found it impossible to live with her, and as he feared violence to himself and children, that he should not permit her again to enter his house. He then sent her a letter in which he said:

"In consequence of your unwomanly, unwelcome and wicked conduct, I am resolved not to live with you any longer under any circumstances, no more of your kind, longer remain under my roof. This decision is brought about by a constant fear of unsafety to my children and self, and you are at liberty to consider yourself as abandoned by me, and avail yourself of any remedies the law may afford you in that respect. I also desire to forbid you again entering my house, and if you do so I shall be compelled to remove you."

In her petition for alimony and counsel fees, read on motion by her counsel, the wife takes occasion to deny all portions of her husband's answer which are material to the case. She asserts that on February 18 of this year, "without just cause or provocation," he assaulted and threw her down violently, that she went to the police station to make a complaint, and when she returned found the doors locked and she was refused admittance. Under these circumstances she admits having crawled through a basement window. In addition to writing her a note forbidding her his house and assaulting her, she alleges that she was ill-treated by his children, and that she did not commit the acts of cruelty of which he complains.

Hannah Atwood, a domestic in the family, testified to Mrs. Martin throwing a steak on the tablecloth and a teapot at Mr. Martin. After the reading of the papers and the argument of counsel, Judge Donohue took the papers and reserved his decision.

Railroading.

Galveston, Tex., July 25.—The conference of the Texas railroad managers has adjourned. Their labors resulted in an organization that will be known as the Texas Traffic association. J. Waldo, of the Houston & Texas Central road, was elected pool commissioner with headquarters at Galveston. The executive committee, with Commissioner Waldo, will fix specific tariff rates and consider details related to them. The conference reached an understanding that there shall be no rebate given to shippers of any degree or condition, and that no concession shall not be practiced in favor of individuals or points.

The First Cotton Bale.

Houston, Tex., July 25.—The first bale of this season's cotton has arrived here from DeWitt county. Its classification is a fair to middling, good staple. It weighed 70 pounds and sold at auction, at the cotton exchange for $100. The cotton was immediately reshipped to New Orleans.
